I met Mrs. Pomerol when she got to Honduras, I was kid back then.
Ive never seen someone with so much courage and will. Even though she had rough patches in Honduras, she sticked around for a very long time helping children improve their lives. For those who don't know, she was the godmother of 19 children, poor children of course.

I remember every christmas, she would dress up as santa claus, and go to some towns up in the mountain and give poor people presents. Not everybody does this kind of things, specially if they know they have an awesome life back in their home country.

Thats why she was so admired, because even though she could go back to her country, she stayed for so long; and did so much good.

Maybe she didn't get rewarded as she should've, but she sure left a piece of her in our hearts.

Always in our hearts

Tribute from Karen Diaz

Relation: I met her in a garage sale

Before she decided to leave Honduras, she put on sale almost all her belongings, my aunt bought a painting in a ridiculous price, I guess Claude was more interested in starting to detach from things than in making profits. After that, we had long conversations and I found an extraordinary person with a huge heart. She helped people in Honduras with things they needed, but what she wanted most was to impact the mentality of them, she wanted to eliminate the discrimination (starting from how people refer about others). I will never forget Claude.
